Molecular formulas are more limiting than chemical names and structural formulas. Empirical and Molecular Formulas. The simplest types of chemical formulas are called empirical formulas, which indicate the ratio of each element in the molecule. The empirical formula is the simplest whole number ratio of all the atoms in a molecule. For example:

Chemical Kinetics - Formulas All rates written as conc time or $[A] t$. Instantaneous rate is the slope of a concentration vs time plot and is shown by the differential equation: $d[A] dt$. Overall rates for forward reactions are shown as POSITIVE rates, therefore, all reactants (which have negative rate of change) must have their rates negated $d \dots$

The structures of two simple alkanes are shown in Figure \\(\PageIndex{1}\\), and the names and condensed structural formulas for the first 10 straight-chain alkanes are in Table \\(\PageIndex{1}\\). The names of all alkanes end in -ane, and their boiling points increase as the number of carbon atoms increases.

We use several kinds of formulas to describe organic compounds. A molecular formula shows only the kinds and numbers of atoms in a molecule. For example, the molecular formula C_4H_{10} tells us there are 4 carbon atoms and 10 hydrogen atoms in a molecule, but it doesn't distinguish between butane and isobutane. A structural formula shows all the carbon and hydrogen atoms and the bonds ...
