The Black Marble Joseph Wambaugh

“THE BLACK MARBLE” (1978) is, I think, Joseph Wambaugh’s triumph. The characters are so deep and true, the humour is totally human, the situations are tense, desperate and awful, but that sick sense of humour of Wambaugh’s works so well. It is a near perfect crime novel!

About The Black Marble. He is a damned good cop—a burned-out homicide detective wrapped around a Smith & Wesson .38 and a vodka bottle. She is his partner—twice divorced, nursing a grudge against men, obsessed by the awful temptation of love. Praise for The Black Marble “[Joseph] Wambaugh sidesteps all the clichés.”—Baltimore Sun

The Black Marble (that's what losers like Val and Philo always wind up with) should hive been better than it is: the police station running gags are too running to be real, the black-comic touches (like a pet funeral) prove again that Wambaugh ain't Waugh, and Andrushka and Natasha deserve better than a pure musical-comedy ending.
